PREFACE

Change is essential for the U.S. Army to maintain its preeminent status as the world's leading land warfighting force. The objective of force management is to manage this change on a continuing basis without adversely effecting readiness.

In his Memo for All Army Leaders, Effective Leadership through Change, 27 July 1997, Army Chief of Staff General Dennis J. Reimer wrote:

As we reshape the force, we will be guided by the Six Imperatives—quality people, realistic training, proper force mix, modernized equipment, the world's best leader development program, and updated doctrine. The changes we make to the force will be passed through those six filters to ensure they make sense.

Today the Six Imperatives translate to Doctrine, Training, Leader Development, Organization, Materiel, and Soldiers—commonly called DTLOMS.

Compiled to support the study of Army Force Management, the main part of this bibliography is categorized using two of the DTLOMS considerations: Doctrine and Organization. Additional citations are grouped under a separate, broader heading which includes the other DTLOMS concepts: Training, Leader Development, Materiel, and Soldiers.

We invite you to also use the previously published U.S. Army War College Library bibliographies listed on page 31 for an overview of our library's holdings on related Army subjects, such as Senior Leadership and Command, Transformation, and Force XXI.

All items are part of our library's collection. With the exception of some important older titles, most have publication dates of 1990 to the present. For your convenience, we have added our library call numbers at the end of each book and document entry. (Call numbers indicate the item's shelf location.) Also, we have included brief explanatory notes where the title of the publication does not adequately indicate its nature.

This bibliography is also available on the Internet through our Library's website: <<http://www.carlisle.army.mil/library/>>.
